EPISODE 2: GINSENG

COLLOCATIONS

When producing formal language in essays, report writing, and letters, or communicating in formal or informal situations, it is important to express yourself and convey meaning as clearly, precisely and accurately as possible.

This can be achieved in part by choosing the right word combination or collocation.

Moreover, using the right collocation will make your writing and speech sound more natural and closer to that of a native speaker.

Collocation – word combination

Collocation is a term used to describe the way particular words in English combine and occur together regularly and commonly. For example, in English we say a 'short film' and 'long walk' but not a 'small film' or 'large walk'. The adjectives 'short' and 'long' collocate naturally with 'film' and 'walk'. Their usage is common and predictable. So also is 'small house' and 'large family' but not 'short house' and 'long family'. Though word combinations are predictable for native speakers, they are not predictable for students of English who will need to learn them as they learn new vocabulary. With practice, using collocations will become second nature.

STUDY TIPS

Using collocations appropriately is vital for communicating in English competently, and producing native-like writing and speech.

Whenever reading or listening, be on the look out for any new word combinations to expand your database of collocations. This will be an indispensable tool in assisting you with your spoken and written language.

Building your collocation vocabulary and databases will also be of benefit for both the IELTS Writing and Speaking tests.

Types of collocations

There are different types of word combinations, including:

- adjective + noun
~ + friend
best, close, family, good, great, old, special, school friend
- adjective + noun
strong + ~ strong chair, current, drug, leader, swimmer, team, supporter
- verb + noun
~ + friends
become, have, make, remain, stay, and win friends
- verb + adverb decrease + ~ decrease considerably, dramatically, gradually, significantly
- adverb + adjective ~ + friendly
extremely, genuinely, naturally, really, reasonably, very friendly
- short phrases with specific word order rain or shine; salt and pepper; rise and shine; pick and choose; safe and sound; hot and cold; left, right and centre; head and shoulders; hard and fast; safe and sound; dollars and cents
- defined sets of words
points of the compass: north, south, east, west days of the week: Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday months of the year: January, February, March, April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November, December seasons: summer, autumn, winter, spring

Collocation notebook

When learning collocations it is helpful to have a collocation notebook as a kind of database to which you can refer, especially when writing.

Organising the word combinations according to a topic and/or headword (main word) allows you to readily find appropriate and more precise expressions. For example, when writing on a topic about the environment, by looking through your database under the topic Environment you would have at your fingertips such collocations as: 'adapt to a new environment', 'environment spokesperson', 'conservation of the environment', 'polluted environment' and others.

Accordingly, it would be beneficial to create your collocation database around IELTS topics, such as the ones covered in Study English – IELTS Preparation: Environment, Medicine, Finance, Economy, Technology,

Tourism, and Education. Further, the entry should also include other important information such as, the pronunciation of the headword, its meaning and then the various types of combinations with the headword.

The following collocation notebook is organised according to IELTS topics. These topic headings also function as the headword for the entry. The structure of the entry includes: the pronunciation, meaning, and the various types of word combinations for the headword indicated in bold.
