EPISODE 18 SALINITY

TRANSITION SIGNALS

Process description is a possible IELTS Writing Task 1. Processes can describe how something works, how something happened or how to do something.

Although these descriptions have different purposes, they all use transitional signals to connect ideas. These study notes focus on the various types of transitional signals that may be used, and also look at the differences between Australian English, British English and American English

Study Tips

When describing processes in IELTS Writing Task 1, it is important to identify clearly the sequence and order of the stages using a variety of Transition Signals, including participial phrases of time.

These provide variety in sentence structure and coherence in your writing.

It is important to be familiar with the main varieties of English since they are all used in the listening section of the IELTS test. In addition, examiners come from many different parts of the world, and may speak a variety of English with which you may not be familiar.

TRANSITION SIGNALS - PROCESS DESCRIPTION

There are several grammatical features, which are used when describing a process.

- a topic sentence with a controlling idea
- present passive verb forms
- transition signals for sequencing and ordering

Transition Signals

Transition signals are used to connect ideas logically and establish a relationship between them. These provide cohesion in your paragraph. When a paragraph is coherent, the sentences are logically arranged, the ideas are in a logical order, and they flow smoothly.

There are several ways to arrange information in a process description to achieve coherence in your writing. Processes are organised chronologically, using:

1. time sequence markers
2. adverbial clauses of time and participial phrases of time

To summarise, there are 3 choices:

- adverbial clause
After the glass is heated, it is shaped into a vase.
- present participle
After heating the glass, it is shaped into a vase.
- perfect participle
Having heated the glass, it is shaped into a vase.

Using participial phrases in your writing not only adds variety in sentence structures, but also makes your writing more sophisticated.

Two of the most common types of participial phrases formed from adverbial clauses of time are:

- the present participle
- the perfect participle

Present Participle
dependent (subordinate) clause	independent clause
after before verb + ing while	subject + verb
Example: Before transporting the trees to the sawmill, the branches and leaves are removed .
Meaning: the action in the subordinate clause takes place before, after or at the same time of the action in the independent clause; here, the branches and leaves are removed, and then the trees are transported to the sawmill.

Perfect Participle
dependent (subordinate) clause	independent clause
having verb + ed ,	subject + verb
Example: Having transported the trees to the sawmill, the branches and leaves were removed .
Meaning: the action in the participial clause takes place before the action in the independent clause; here the trees are transported to the sawmill, and then the branches and leaves removed.
