Statement from Jordan Shanks, also known as, friendlyjordies

We regularly make public appeals for information based on tips provided by confidential sources. It is bewildering that the ICAC is now utilising its massive coercive powers to make inferences as to whether this practice is appropriate.

As journalists, you would know the motives and morality of a source should be secondary to the story itself. We would investigate a tip from the Devil (or even David Elliott) if it were credible, as this tip was. We would make this post again ...
