

What lies at the heart of a home?

THE HOMES THAT BUILT AUSTRALIA

This four-part history series looks at how Australia has been shaped by its many definitions of home

From the end of WWII into the present day, this factual series unpacks the key historic moments that have had an overwhelming impact on homes, their design, and the way we live as a society.

Many factors play a part in the surprising story of a country building its way into the future: economic booms and busts, the fight for Indigenous land rights and recognition, cultural migration and the unrelenting force of nature.

Featuring interviews from leading architects, design experts, historians and social commentators, the series tackles questions around the evolution of the 'Australian Dream'.

Did building booms endure the test of time, or did they hammer down dreams on shaky foundations? Where was there success, and where was there failure? Have lessons been learned from the past, or does history continue to repeat itself?

The Homes That Built Australia explores the untold stories beneath our feet, around our living rooms and within our hearts.
