GREAT WHITE MATRIX

Step into the unknown world of great white sharks as shark attack survivor and former Navy diver Paul de Gelder, alongside Emmy Award-winning underwater cameraman Andy Casagrande, help us to understand the behaviour of great white sharks and uncover the differences between fatal and non-fatal bites.

Using harrowing first-hand accounts and cutting edge time-slice camera technology, Paul and Andy journey from a unique juvenile shark nursery in Eastern Australia – where great white sharks thrive amongst humans – to deadly waters in remote South Australia full of ferocious adult sharks, to analyse vital differences between sharks that kill humans, and those that don't.

GREAT WHITE MATRIX provides a fascinating and compelling insight into these remarkable creatures.

Using twenty small cameras on a semi-circular frame, the time-slice rig works by simultaneously filming the one piece of action from multiple angles. This allows the action to cheat time and space; moving forwards, backwards, slowing down, speeding up, and moving around.

The time-slice rig captures shark attacks in a way that's never been done successfully before, showing unprecedented details of the way a shark behaves and bites when it attacks.

This in-situ investigative adventure, mixing courage and science, reveals the remarkably diverse ways a shark will attack its prey. Paul and Andy take on this genuinely dangerous and awesome mission to prove that although all great white sharks are dangerous, not every one is a man-eater.
