Statement from Josh Matthews, Chief Operating Officer of the Capital Radio Network:

Thank you for your email.

With respect of the Rolling Stones competition, the winner, Deb, is a real person from the Victorian town of Cardinia.

With respect of the Madonna competition, the winner, Paula, is a real person from Canberra, ACT.

With respect of the Rod Stewart competition, the winner, Lisa, is a real person from the Victorian town of Traralgon.

Each phone call made to a winner for the respective competition is made by a Capital Radio Network announcer.

Each of the above winners have received:

- tickets to the respective shows (ie: Rod Stewart, Madonna and or The Rolling Stones);
- $5000.00 spending money; and
- return overseas air fares to the city in which the contest promotes the show to be performed in.

The Capital Radio Network has not deceived its listeners.

In all three competitions mentioned in your email, the accompanying terms and conditions (example attached) state that the competition is a “Capital Radio Network wide contest” and were published on each station website.

The Capital Radio Network further ensures that the on-air promotion of its network contests are clear in that the promotion is network wide, including the audio aired at the time that the winner is announced. I have attached an example to evidence this.

Listeners should tune into the Capital Radio Network for our next superstar experience, where we will send two people to see Billy Joel and Sting, together in concert in Los Angeles!

Regards,

Josh
